By. Frank Leon Smith. ✓

David Cameron and his daughter, Beth, who have come from Kentucky, are forced to camp for the night just outside Carter's Creek, Idaho Territory, which is their destination, when their travel-worn wagon collapses. Members of an organized gang of desperadoes fail in an attempt to hold up Boston Graham, Pony Express Rider, because their horses are fleet enough. So they attack Cameron, mortally wounding him, stealing his horses and burning his wagon. Beth arrives on the scene as they are making off and observes that the leader of the gang has a streak of white in his dark hair. Destroyed with the wagon was a letter that would have apprized Beth of the secret her father was keeping from her until they should reach Carter's Creek.
